Imagine 100 people who already have measles. Now imagine a measles vaccine injected into those 100 people and every case of measles is cured overnight. If science is so advanced, why isn't this the focus of vaccine research, to reverse disease when it's already present. What possible benefit could medicine have for claiming to treat, prevent or eliminate disease before it even exists? Gee, let me think.

Think for a second about the foundations of vaccine mythology. If I received a flu vaccine and didn't get the flu that year....the vaccine maker, science and medicine all jump out of the bushes declaring, "You can thank us for that!" Thank you for what? What really happened? The answer is that nothing happened and that's the problem. The medical system is pointing toward the most natural function of the body, which is "not getting sick" and then claiming, "Hey, we did that and now because we did that (which they didn't do) everyone must buy our vaccines." Claiming responsibility for something that doesn't happen, is the con job of all con jobs.

If I pick up a coffee at the drive-thru and drive from the coffee shop to my place of work and arrive disease free, the coffee shop owner could literally claim that it was the coffee that made me arrive disease free....yet we all know that claim is irrational and illogical. That's literally the same claim vaccine mythology is making. Making a claim for something that didn't happen, as opposed to making a claim for something that did happen. They're not reversing existing disease, in a display of advanced scientific knowledge.

All science is doing is injecting you with documented toxins and when you don't get the exact disease that the vaccine was named after, science stands back and says, "Hey, that was us, we did that, you didn't get sick because of us.... you need us, everyone needs us." It's like a lunatic standing in the middle of a town square and declaring that it was he alone that made sure the sun didn't crash into the earth today and because of this magic act (which can never be proven or even dis-proven) everyone owes him $10.

Are we really to believe that a person like myself who drinks no alcohol, does no drugs, goes to bed at 10:30 every night, eats only organic food, exercises daily.....will only avoid disease if I take a vaccine full of known poisons? No greater pile of lie-arhia may exist yet billions are falling for this con because they've had their ability to think logically surgically removed by the same people who are now trying to force poison us and our children. A eugenic agenda cloaked as science. Eugenics disguised as health care.

Inversely when a vaccine full of poison, does what poison does, and poisons a patient, making them more ill, the medical field stands back declaring, "Hey that wasn't me. Nothing to see here. Better luck next time. Bad genes, bad timing, bad luck. All your fault. Carry on." It's hard to know which idea is more asinine or moronic, really. This "it wasn't me attitude" (a known trait of how a child reacts when they're caught red handed) goes as far as even denying listed vaccine side effects. For example, death is listed as a side effect of a flu vaccine but if the flu shot kills a child (and it sometimes does, that's why it's a listed side effect) the medical professionals will still declare that the death had nothing to do with the vaccine.

Death as a listed side effect, vaccine kills a child, still not the vaccine. Happening every day across the world. That's how wide and deep this mountain of lie-ahria is and how much we're programmed to look the other way, in regards to ideas that don't make any sense just because we're programmed to believe that no one in a white lab coat would ever lie to us. That one belief has caused unmeasurable pain for billions.

What most people don't know is that no vaccine trial in history has vaccinated a test subject and exposed that person to the target virus, and compared that result to an unvaccinated person. That's never been done. So how does science know that a vaccinated person is more immune to disease than an unvaccinated person? They don't because those studies don't exist.

Go ahead, ask your doctor for 1 study where a vaccinated person was exposed to the same environment as an unvaccinated person, proving that the vaccinated person was more immune to disease. You'll be waiting a while because that study has never been done.
